Question 2

Write short answers to the following questions in about 75 words each. [5×2=10]

a. What kind of freedom does the writer enjoy in physical library? (On Libraries)

- The writer enjoys a profound freedom in a physical library, where they can roam shelves at their own pace, free from digital interruptions. This space offers the liberty to stumble upon unexpected knowledge, dive deep into books, and think critically in a quiet, tangible environment. Unlike online platforms, the physical library provides an unhurried, personal exploration, fostering a sense of intellectual autonomy and serendipitous discovery.

b. How does Mrs. Baroda presuppose her husband's friend, Gouvernail? (A Respectable Woman)

- Mrs. Baroda initially presupposes Gouvernail as unremarkable and dull, expecting little interaction due to his quiet demeanor. She anticipates him to be a typical, unengaging guest, based on her husband's description. However, her preconception shifts as she observes his subtle charm and intellect, revealing her initial judgment as superficial. This evolution hints at her growing curiosity, though she struggles with her unexpected attraction to him.

c. What sort of determination does the poet show in the poem 'I was My Own Route'?

- The poet exhibits a fierce determination to carve an independent path, embracing self-reliance and resilience. Despite societal pressures or obstacles, they assert their autonomy, choosing to define their journey on their terms. This resolve reflects a bold rejection of conformity, showcasing an inner strength to navigate life's uncertainties alone, with a steadfast commitment to personal growth and authenticity.

d. How does the Israeli yoga teacher try to profess about the origination of yoga? (Humility)

- The Israeli yoga teacher humbly shares yoga's ancient Indian origins, emphasizing its spiritual and philosophical roots. Rather than asserting authority, they encourage students to explore its history through practice and reflection, promoting a modest approach. This method fosters a respectful understanding, highlighting yoga's evolution while inspiring personal connection, rather than imposing a rigid narrative.

e. What circumstances led Monsieur Durand to commit suicide? (Facing Death)

- Monsieur Durand's suicide stemmed from overwhelming despair due to financial ruin and social isolation. Facing bankruptcy and the loss of status, he felt trapped with no support. The burden of shame and hopelessness, compounded by a lack of familial or communal aid, drove him to this tragic end. His circumstances reflect a profound struggle with identity and survival in a society that offered little solace.

Question 3

Write long answers to the following questions in about 150 words each. [2×5=10]

a. What were the three different types of workers involved in different works in contemporary Chinese society? Give detail of their work. (My Old Home)

- In contemporary Chinese society, three distinct worker types emerge: farmers, factory workers, and intellectuals. Farmers toil in rural fields, cultivating crops like rice and wheat under harsh weather conditions, sustaining the nation's food supply with traditional methods. Factory workers labor in urban industrial zones, assembling goods such as electronics and textiles, often enduring long hours and repetitive tasks for modest wages, driving economic growth. Intellectuals, including teachers and writers, contribute through education and literature, shaping cultural and moral values despite limited resources. Each group faces unique challenges—farmers contend with land scarcity, factory workers with exploitation, and intellectuals with censorship—yet their interdependent efforts uphold society. This diversity reflects China's complex socio-economic fabric, where physical labor, industrial output, and intellectual pursuit collectively define progress, as depicted in the nostalgic yet critical lens of "My Old Home."
- b. What could be the purpose of the poet when he portrays the forlorn child and the homeless children crying in hunger in Thamel? (Soft Storm)
- The poet's portrayal of a forlorn child and homeless children crying in hunger in Thamel likely serves to evoke empathy and raise awareness about poverty and neglect. By highlighting their plight in a bustling tourist hub, the poet contrasts affluence with suffering, urging readers to confront societal indifference. This emotional imagery aims to inspire action, encouraging compassion and support for the marginalized. Additionally, it may critique systemic failures, such as inadequate social welfare, that perpetuate child homelessness. The poet's purpose could also be introspective, prompting readers to reflect on their own privilege and moral responsibility. Through this vivid depiction, the poet seeks to humanize the statistics, fostering a collective conscience to address hunger and provide shelter, ultimately advocating for a more equitable society amidst the "soft storm" of urban life.

Write a story using the outlines given below in about 150 words. [7]

In a small village, a girl lived with her brother and mother after her father lost his job while she was young. Starting with responsibility, she took on household errands, waking before dawn, and worked in a textile factory. Dreaming of becoming a teacher, she saved money for evening classes. Her hard work and dedication impressed her employer, who offered her a scholarship for a Bachelor's degree. She excelled, earning a gold medal, and became an inspiration to the villagers.

Story: In a quiet village, young Maya lived with her brother and mother after her father lost his job due to illness. At just ten, she took on household chores, waking early to fetch water and cook, while working in a local textile factory to support her family. Despite the grueling routine, Maya dreamed of becoming a teacher. She saved every penny from her wages for evening classes, studying tirelessly. Her dedication caught her employer's eye, who awarded her a scholarship for a Bachelor's degree. Maya excelled, graduating with a gold medal. Her success transformed her life and inspired the village, where children now saw education as a path out of poverty. Maya's journey from hardship to triumph became a beacon of hope, proving that perseverance can turn dreams into reality.

Question 6

Parents generally devote their lives in shaping their children's future. Therefore, they expect more from them. Do you agree? Write an essay on 'The Child-Parent Relationship in Nepalese context' in about 300 words. [10]

Essay: The Child-Parent Relationship in Nepalese Context

In Nepal, the child-parent relationship is deeply rooted in tradition, respect, and mutual responsibility. Parents often devote their lives to shaping their children's future, sacrificing personal comforts to provide education, food, and security. This devotion stems from cultural values that view children as an investment for the family's continuity and prosperity. In rural areas, parents toil in fields or migrate for work, while in urban settings, they take multiple jobs to ensure their children attend good schools. Consequently, they expect obedience, academic success, and eventual support in old age, reflecting a reciprocal bond.

I agree that parents expect more from their children due to this investment. In Nepalese society, children are often seen as the carriers of family honor. For instance, excelling in studies or securing a stable job is not just personal achievement but a way to repay parental sacrifices. However, this expectation can sometimes create pressure, leading to stress among youth, especially in competitive urban environments where academic performance is heavily emphasized.

Despite these expectations, the relationship is not one-sided. Children, influenced by filial piety, often care for aging parents, a practice still common in joint families. Yet, modernization and migration are challenging this dynamic, with some children moving abroad and sending remittances instead of physical care. This shift sometimes strains the traditional bond, creating a gap between expectation and reality.

In conclusion, the child-parent relationship in Nepal is a blend of duty and love, where parents' devotion fuels high expectations. While this fosters resilience, it requires a balance to avoid undue pressure, ensuring a harmonious relationship that adapts to changing times while preserving cultural values
